Our rental fleet is a balanced mix of late model vans, stake bodies, box trucks of all sizes, and tractor-trailer combinations of all weight classes. Why do you need to rent a truck?

Business Peaks - If your business is similar to others, there may be times when you have more demand for your product or service than equipment to support that demand. The flexibility of truck renting gives your business the equipment it needs to fill those orders without tying up capital for when you don't need it.

Own Vehicles Broke Down - If you have your own trucks, then you know that maintenance problems do occur. When this happens, truck renting allows you to make your deliveries while repairs are being made to your own trucks.

Seasonal Business - If your business is operational only during certain parts of the year then truck renting lets you make those necessary deliveries without investing in capital that sits idle for the rest of the year.

Awaiting New Vehicles - If you purchase or lease a new truck then it could take 3-6 months before it's placed into service. Truck renting will fill in that time gap so that you can make your deliveries while your new truck is being built.

Testing New Distribution - If you want to test new products or markets, then truck renting enables you to distribute products or services into this uncertain arena without committing the capital expenses necessary to ensure its success.
